

TTIP INFOCUS: 11 Myths Exposed

Eoin Drea

© The Author(s) 2015. This article is published with open access at Springerlink.com

The Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership (TTIP) aims to remove trade barriers between the world's two largest economies—the EU and the US. The goal is to create growth and jobs on both sides of the Atlantic. However, the opposition to TTIP in Europe has increased significantly. This opposition reflects broader discontent at existing political structures, the continuing fall-out of the economic crises evident in Europe since 2008 and the concerns many Europeans feel about the revelations concerning the National Security Agency. This work looks at eleven of the myths of the anti-TTIP campaign and provides fact based responses.

Open Access This article is distributed under the terms of the Creative Commons Attribution License which permits any use, distribution, and reproduction in any medium, provided the original author(s) and the source are credited.

Eoin Drea is Research Officer at the Wilfried Martens Centre for European Studies with expertise in the areas of European Monetary Union, central banking, political economy and the development of banking structures in the twentieth century. He holds a Ph.D. in Economic History from University College Cork, Ireland.